Synopsis: Life is easy for little Zeeko, cared for by his loving friend Mona in a comfortable Beirut household. But when the shooting starts, Zeeko has to make some difficult choices.

The Author: Emily Nasrallah is a Lebanese writer who currently lives in Beirut. Emily showed literary talents at an early age, she took up writing and journalism while still in college a talent for which she would receive great recognition. She graduated from the American University of Beirut in 1958 with a BA in education and literature, but soon achieved acclaim for her writing with the publication of her first novel, Birds of September, in 1962. The book earned her instant praise and three Arabic literary prizes. She became a prolific writer, publishing many novels, children's stories and short story collections touching on themes such as family, village life, war, emigration and women's rights. The latter has been a subject she has maintained support for throughout her life.
